The Fireman's Story.

How Jim O'Neil Picked up a Bunch of Beasts

(Chicago Times Jan. 7th.)

"I reckon you've heard tell of Jim O'Neil what was 'sassainated down at Bloomington the other night,'" remarked Jack Reynolds to a reporter of the Times on Saturday. The latter acknowledged that he had heard a good deal lately about the party referred to. Jack Reynolds does the "stroking" on one of the largest locomotives on the Chicago and Alton Railroad.

Just wait till I toss in a couple of shovels, 'cause time's nearly up and we'll be off soon and I'll tell you something 'bout Jim," said the fireman as he pitched some chunks of coal into the roaring furnace. "They don't make better engineers," he continued, "than that Jim O'Neil was. You see you folks what ride back there in them fine coaches and play poker and read the newspapers, and only look out when a haul is made, and commence readin' and playin' agin when the train darts away with a shriek, a roar and a rattle; you folks, I say, don't know what danger is. No, sir. Just you come ahead here and stand for eighteen years, and I'll bet your back will raise up sometimes. But Jim didn't mind it much. He was the coolest and the most bravest man I ever seen in my life. He acted all the while just like he was ready to die any minute. And do you know he would talk to his engine jus like a man would talk to a woman. He would pet her, and say sweet, sympathizing things to her. When she was leadin' out her level best, runnin' maybe forty miles an hour, Jim would look her all over kind of affectionately, and say to himself, with a shake of the head: 'She ain't well to-day; I don't know what ails her, but she ain't feelin' just right.'"

Jack opened the furnace door again and dropped in some fresh fuel on the glowing coals. "You see," he continued, "Jim and me run an engine together five years, just as me and my boss there (pointing to the engineer, who had at that moment stepped into the cab,) are doing now. He took me on when I was a green hand, and in all the years we stuck together he never spoke a cross word to me, and if he'd been a mind to he might have pitched me out of the cab window any time for he was a powerful man. I'm got used to runnin' now, and I don't bother my head about what's going to happen; but when Jim O'Neil first took me on, I was awful scary, and often wished I was one of them farmers what we saw plowing as we passed."

"O'Neil had a great many narrow escapes, did he not?" interrupted the reporter, with a view to eliciting some narrative in Jack's peculiar vernacular. "You are right he had," replied Jack, "and the half of them ain't been told about in the newspapers. Jim always knowed when anything was goin' to happen. Once we had nine cars and a big lot of people, and we was runnin' to make up lost time. It was just a little afore dark, and, takin his eye from off the track, Jim turned to me and says he: 'I here's trouble ahead; I feel it in my bones.' At first I kinder suspected he was tryin' to frighten me, but after a bit he said to me: 'D-n-it. I wish I could look round the big curve and see if the bridge is all right.' That scared me more'n ever. I noticed that Jim had his eyes set right down on the rails, but it was gettin' so dark that he couldn't see fur. The old locomotive was just puttin' in her best lick, and presently we shot out on to 'the high fillin' that ran to the bridge. As we made the curve at the mouth of the cut, right there in front of us, and not more'n two hundred feet away, was four horses what was runnin' their best down the grade towards the bridge. I felt my heart thump agin the roof of my mouth. If Jim hadn't looked so cool, I guess I'd have tossed myself through the window; but I thought I'd stay as long as Jim did. He took in the chances at a glance. He knowed if them horses ever got to that bridge, why they'd tumble down 'twixt the stringers, and that when we struck 'em we'd jump the track, and go through the bridge into the river, and God knows whether anybody of them hundreds of people would have lived to tell what I'm tellin' now. So, quick as a flash—for with a locomotive runnin' forty miles an hour you must do your figure in a hurry—Jim slapped on all the steam. My God how she shot. She nearly jumped out from under me. In three seconds the old locomotive just picked up that bunch of beasts and tossed them down the banks. They didn't any of them live to see the hind car pass by 'em."

"When my heart dropped back to its place," added Jack, "I ventured to say to Jim, 'That was a close shave, wasn't it?' but Jim never took his eye from the track, and never said yes or no, and, though him and me run together for years and years, he never spoke of how he scooped them critters into the ditch, and saved, God only knows, how many lives."

There is one thing which Nature does not supply, and which civilization renders quite necessary, to fowls. It is charcoal. Charcoal made of wood does not answer the purpose; it has no taste for food, is not attractive to the fowl, and is seldom eaten. But if anyone will put an ear of ripe corn into the fire until the grains are well charred, and then shell off the corn and throw it to the flock, he will see an eagerness developed and a healthy constitution brought about which will make a decided improvement. All pale combs will become a bright red, that busy song which precedes laying will be heard, and the average yield of eggs will be greatly increased.—German town telegraph.

Dick Bland.

It seems that every precious metal comes from Nevada at last. The papers have discovered that Bland, the author of the celebrated silver bill which passed the House, is one and the same with Richard Park Bland whom we knew in Virginia City in the old days. "Dick" Bland, as he was called, was a very popular young man in those days even, and acquired a reputation for affability and worth which might have served him for political capital even in Nevada. He was related to the Fulton family, old pioneers of Nevada, and upon the death of Mr. Fulton it was a duty with Mr. Bland to return the orphans, three in number, to the old folks on the other side of the continent. He chose the steamer route, and, by an unlucky chance, passage was secured upon the ill-fated steamer Golden Gate. Two of the three children perished in the disaster, and we had thought until now that there also ended the life of genial "Dick" Bland. But now when a depreciated currency is depressing trade and making us distrust the laws and virtues of our own institution we are pleased to know that one of our most able defenders is found in the person of our old-time friend. Life is full of strange chances, surely, for here we have seen in a rough mining camp the man who through his own ability was to bring just relief to a great nation. We have seen the culmination of a life which was only earnest and able, in the halls of Congress. We have seen it spared by fire and shipwreck, to work for us where honest men and minds are most needed, and as the writer looks back and remembers the genial storyteller of his youth, he claims the privileges of pride in the success which has attended upon the merits of honest Dick Bland.

The Reno Mine.

This now famous quartz location is situated near the summit of one of the loftiest hills on the east side of Bobtail gulch, a tributary of Deadwood coming in from the south, and is distant from Central City about one-half mile. The mine consists of 300 by 750 feet, and is owned by Messrs. L. G. Turner, A. Sawdye, A. L. Louden, H. Hulm, H. Gamage and J. H. Suseman, the first three gentlemen owning a two-thirds interest, and the three last a one-third interest in the property. The developments at this date (January 17th.) consist of a well constructed tunnel run in on bed-rock a distance of 70 feet, the top or roof of the tunnel cutting the bottom of the ore strata and completely draining the mine of seepage water. Fifteen feet above, and directly over this, another tunnel, or more properly, "a level," has been driven into the hill, squarely tapping the ore body 20 feet from commencement, and showing a solid and valuable mass of ore for a further distance of 240 feet, the face of the tunnel, as well as the roof, floor and sides, being in ore of the finest quality. From the various other openings in the mine there is little or no doubt that the entire 300 by 750 feet is a compact and valuable deposit of ore and cement exceedingly rich in gold. Indeed, the statistics of the Reno mine are of such a convincing character as to lead one to pronounce it, without hazard of error, uniformly the richest "pay streak" yet discovered in the Black Hills. The history of the location is this: The Messrs. Turner, Louden and Sawdye, were among the first miners in the Black Hills; and after dodging Indians and United States soldiers for several months finally camped where Central City now stands and commenced prospecting the high points above Deadwood gulch for quartz. Their efforts were at last successful, and in February, 1877, they discovered, and the following March located the Reno mine. Large quantities of "float" rock showing free gold were scattered over the surface of the hill, and the discovery of the chief mass of mineral was an easy matter. Since the discovery, some $4,000 worth of work and material have been expended on the mine, the labor and expenses of which as well as the cost of living for the owners and laborers and all "pocket-money" of the proprietors has been paid out of the rock in a common hand mortar and washed out in an ordinary prospecting pan. And this is still the process used. A mill, however, will be put at work on the quartz this week, under the superintendency of that experienced mining and mill man, Capt. J. D. Wooden, when results will be given. It is calculated by the best experts that the ore will average $3000 per ton, and no doubt it will crowd this magnificent figure closely. To give an idea of the almost incalculable value of this mine, we need only mention that long before its present advanced state of development $100,000 in gold was offered for the property and refused. A single ounce (a specimen of course) yielded $3.50, and 1½ pounds of rock pounded to pieces on a hard flat rock, with a sledge hammer, yielded the astonishing result of $16. The editor of the News Letter while getting the notes for this report, from a double handful of fine decomposed rock, carelessly taken from the dump, obtained full 25 cents in fine and coarse gold, while several other prospects taken at different points in the tunnel, yielded fully as astonishing results. The mine is regarded as one of the most valuable pieces of mining property in the Black Hills. The deposit lying horizontal, and the face of the hill affording excellent opportunity for dumping and removing the ore, the mine will be easily worked. A good road is now constructed from Central City, up Bobtail gulch, and on gradually up the hill to the face of the mine.

Cows in Early Winter.

At no season of the year do cows need better and more generous diet than in early Winter. The change from grass to dry fodder is of itself sufficient cause to produce more or less derangement of health. But when the animal's tone and vigor have been lowered by a long period of milking, and she is then subjected, at the same time, to the rigors of Winter, and a change of food from nutritious herbage to dry, coarse, and often in-nutritious fodder, a severe tax is laid on her system. Yet, on many farms, it is the practice to feed to cattle, in early Winter, only coarse and inferior fodder and the poorest hay, because these articles have been stored last in the barn, or on the tops of the mows, and must therefore, be disposed of before the better portions of the supply can be reached. This, however, is a great mistake, as the best food should be given when the cows first go into Winter quarters. Afterward, when they have been dried of their milk and have become accustomed to the change of diet, the poorer food may be used, or, better still, as animals, like men, are fond of variety in their diet, the coarser and less nutritious fodder may be advantageously used in conjunction with that of a better quality.

Through neglect of this precaution, however, it frequently happens that cows in milk lose flesh during November and December, and sink into a bad condition to endure the still more severe weather yet to be expected. To avoid this misfortune, in cases where poor or damaged fodder has to be given out first, the feed should be supplemented with rations of ground grain, oat and corn-meal mixed, bran, or ship-stuff, to add a proper amount of nutriment to a given bulk of fodder. Compelling cows to consume an excessive amount of inferior food, in order to enable them to support life and yield milk, overloads the stomach, tends to derange health, and is by no means a rare cause of serious ailments. Moreover, on the score of self interest, as well as of humanity, cows should not be allowed to lose flesh in early Winter, for it would require much more food to restore them to good condition in cold weather than in Summer. Besides this, as lean animals are more susceptible to cold than those in flesh, and a proportionately larger amount of the food they consume is therefore expended in generating a sufficiency of animal heat, it would require considerably more food to carry a poor beast through Winter than a fat one, even though nothing may be added to the animal's condition.

The necessity of shelter for all kinds of stock from the storms, frosts and inclemency of this bleak season, has been frequently dwelt upon in these pages, and its economy as well as its humanity fully demonstrated.—Rural New Yorker.

DAIRYMEN ATTENTION.

The Buffalo Salt Works

ARE NOW IN CONDITION TO SUPPLY
all your wants, and the proprietor asserts that for quality his product cannot be beaten.

The BUFFALO DAIRY SALT received the first premium at the Fourth Annual Fair of the Nevada State Agricultural, Mining and Mechanical Society, and it is really

A FINE QUALITY OF SALT.

Farmers are Invited to Try It.

The same salt is now in use in Sierra, Lassen and Modoc counties, and gives the best of satisfaction for Dairy and meat curing purposes.

LARGE QUANTITIES OF Meat, Dairy and Stock Salt

Are now ready at the marsh for shipment, and the proprietor, feeling convinced that he has a superior article, has determined that farmers shall try it.

Dairymen are Invited to Experiment at my Expense.

After using Liverpool Salt try some fine dairy salt from the Buffalo Marsh, and note the difference in price.

For sale at Farmers' Store and Manning & Duck's, Reno, Nevada.
